A
MIDSOMMER NIG
DREAME.

Enter Theſeus, Hippolita, with other

Theſeus.

NOw faire Hippolita, our nuptiall h
Drawes on apace: foure happy da
Another Moone: but oh, me-thin
This old Moone wanes: She ling
Like to a Step-dam, or a Dowager,
Long withering out a young mans reuenew.
Hip. Foure daies will quickly ſteepe themſe
Foure daies will quickly dreame away the ti
And then the Moone, like to a ſiluer bow,
Now bent in heauen, ſhall behold the night
Of our ſolemnities.
The. Goe Philoſtrate,
Stirre vp the Athenian youth to merriments,
Awake the peart and nimble ſpirit of mirth,
Turne melancholy foorth to Funerals:
The pale companion is not for our pompe.
Hippolita, I woo'd thee with my ſword,
And wonne thy loue, doing thee iniuries:
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pompe, with triumph, and with reuellin
Enter Egeus and his daughter Hermia, and Helena, and Demetrius.
Ege. Happy be Theſeus, our renowned Duk
The. Thanks good Egeus. What's the newe
Ege. Full of vexation, come I, with compla